CHAPTER I.

GENERAL DESCRIPTION. DENSITY—RURAL AND URBAN POPULATION.

Ajmere and Merwara together comprise 2,710 miles of country surrounded and intersected by Feudatory States. Merwara is formed of the main range of the Aravalli hills, the highest point being 3,000 feet. The general lie of the country is 1,500 feet above sea-level.

Ajmere is chiefly plain cultivated by Jats, Gujars, and some mixed tribes; three-fifths are owned by Rajput Istimrardars, who pay a quit rent to the State, and the rest by Zemindars, Jagirdars, and Bhumias, the latter of whom hold the land in return for service. Nearly one-fourth of the population live in the towns of Ajmere, Nasirabad, and Kekri.

Merwara is cultivated and owned almost entirely by the Mer clans. Beawar is the only town, and about one-fifth of the population live there.

Irrigation is by tanks and wells dependent entirely on the rainfall for their supply. The average fall is 22·8 inches, but subject to great variation causing periodical droughts, which often necessitate the temporary migration of a portion of the population. The staple food of the people is bajra, jowar, maize, and barley. Generations of periodical scarcity have kept the physical condition of the people below the standard of more favoured provinces.

In the two districts there are four towns and 741 villages: of the latter, three, namely Pushkar, Pisangan, Deoli, partake of a semi-urban character. The average area of towns is 10·1 square miles, and of inhabited villages 4·9 square miles in Ajmere and 1·9 square miles in Merwara. The number of towns and villages per square mile is 0·27.

The total population censused on the night of the 26th February and the number of occupied houses returned was as under:—

	Occupied houses.	Total population.	Males.	Females.
Ajmere	79,638	422,359	223,547	198,812
Merwara	22,016	119,999	64,778	55,221
Total .	101,654	542,358	288,325	254,033

The density and house-room of the population, as it now stands, will be seen from the following table:—

District.	Area, square miles.	No. of towns and villages	No. of occupied houses.	Total population, both sexes.	Houses per square mile.	Persons per village and town.	Persons per square mile.	Persons per house.

The density of the population has increased by 30 persons to the square mile in Ajmere and 29 to the square mile in Merwara since 1881. In the North-West Provinces the density is 442 and in the Punjab 187. A comparison with the contiguous Feudatory States is given in the marginal table.

The number of persons per house depends on the definition of house adopted. Owing to the number of enclosures with only one entrance, occupied by a number of distinct and separate families, the house, in the case of such enclosures, was taken to be the set of rooms occupied by each family, if four or more distinct families lived in the enclosure. The result of this has been a fall in the average number of persons per house as compared with 1881, when the figure was 7·18. In Bombay the figure is 5·5 and in the North-West Provinces 5·7, and there is no reason to think that Ajmere is more crowded as to its house-room than other districts.

The population returned in towns and villages will be found in Table I. Dwellers in towns number more than one-fifth of the whole population, and if the semi-urban population of Pushkar, Pisangan, Deoli, is added, they amount to one-fourth of the population.

The square mile density and house-room of urban and rural areas is as follows:—

		Area in square miles.	Occupied houses.	Population.	Persons per square mile.	Persons per house.
Ajmere City and Suburbs		27	14,949	68,843	2549·7	4·60

	Total Rural	2670·27	75,867	423,727	158·7	5·58

The population of Beawar is contained almost entirely within the city walls, and there is little or no suburb. Hence the high average of persons to the square mile. House-room is practically the same in Ajmere and Beawar.

Comparison between the Urban and Rural population will be found under each of the different chapters. The principal towns are noted below:—

Ajmere Town.—The population of Ajmere is 68,843 located as shown in the marginal table. The increase since 1881 has been 20,108, or 41·2 per cent., namely 36·3 per cent. of males and 44·2 per cent. of females. Hindus number 36,729, Mahomedans 26,433, and Jains 2,770. The disciples of the Arya Samaj number 1,097. Mahomedans have increased 41 per cent. since last Census, and Hindus (including Jains and Sikhs) by 39 per cent. The strength of some of the principal castes is given in the margin. There are 7,935 boys and 7,547 girls under 10 years of age. Out of every 1,000 persons 459 are females, 53 per cent. of the population is married, and 11 per cent. widowed; of females 29 per cent. are unmarried and 17 per cent. widowed. The total population employed in, or dependent on employees of, the Railway in Ajmere is 10,050, of whom 5,810 are males and 4,240 females. The Railway therefore employs 14 per cent. of the total population. There are 100 blind, 5 lepers and 15 lunatics in Ajmere Beawar.—The population of Beawar, the chief and only town in the Merwara District, is 20,978, having increased by 5,149 since 1881, or 32·5 per cent. Males have increased by 29·2 per cent. and females by 36·6 per cent. Hindus number 14,551, or 68 per cent. of the population; Jains 2,484, and Mahomedans 3,641; children under 10 form 23 per cent. of the people, there being 2,473 boys and 2,465 girls. Out of every 1,000 persons 450 are females, the preponderance of males being due to the number of commercial men who reside in Beawar for business only and have their houses elsewhere; 53 per cent. of the population are married and 11 per cent. widowed; 29 per cent. of females and 40 per cent. of males are single. The principal castes in point of numbers are as shown in the marginal table. There are no lepers, and only 6 lunatics in Beawar and 55 persons are blind.

Beawar is growing into the chief market of import and export in Western Rajputana. Rail-carried exports amounted in 1889 to close on 20,000 tons, and the imports to about the same. The principal export is pressed cotton. Beawar as a town dates only from about 1835.

Nasirabad.—The population enumerated amounted to 21,710, distributed between the military and civil portion of the town as in the margin. The British regiment usually stationed in the cantonment was in course of relief and was not enumerated in Nasirabad. The civil population has increased by 6 per cent. only since 1881, there having been an exodus of the coolie classes to Ajmere and other places where labour was more in demand. The fact that females exceed the number of males would go to show that the migration was only temporary and that the women and children remained behind. Children bear a proportion of 27 per cent. to the population. Hindus number 15,195 in the whole cantonment and Mahomedans 5,472.

Kekri.—The population of Kekri is 7,100, the increase since 1881 being 16 per cent. This small town is increasing as a market and the small annual Tejaji Fair is becoming a recognised commercial as well as religious institution. Occupied houses were returned at 1,353 against 750 in 1881.

Deoli.—This cantonment has not been included among Towns, though it partakes more of an urban than rural character. It consists of the cantonment, the head quarters of the Deoli Irregular Force, the Sadar Bazar, and the Agency Bazar, of which the population is as under—

CHAPTER II.

MOVEMENT OF THE POPULATION.

The population returned at each of the enumerations that have taken place in Ajmere-Merwara is given in the margin. The Census of 1872 was considered inaccurate, and the results were not abstracted. It was however estimated independently of the Census that 25 per cent. of the people had died or migrated during the famine of 1868-70, and the depopulation of that period is still traceable in the unduly small proportion of men and women between the ages of 20-30 at the present or between 10 and 20 at the last Census. The opening of the Railway in 1879 and the fact of Ajmere being made its head-quarters led to a great influx from outside in 1876-81, which has continued to a lesser degree during the last 10 years. The settlers of 1879 have brought their families to live with them or have married, and had children born to them, and the increase in the population of Ajmere and Beawar is even greater than it was in 1881. This applies only to those two towns however, and the general increase throughout rural areas (with the exception of Southern Merwara) is attributable to the general filling up of the districts after 20 years of comparative freedom from scarcity following the severe famine of 1868. In the south of Merwara, and in a lesser degree in the north, scarcity had led to the migration of a certain portion of the population before the recent Census. The number was estimated at 1,000 families.

Census.	Population.	Variation.
1865	426,268
1872	316,590	—109,678
1876	396,331	+79,741
1881	460,722	+64,391
1891	542,358	+81,636

According to the mortuary returns the number to be accounted for by immigration would be nearly 60,000. Birth registration is however faulty and cannot be relied on for statistics of this character. Thus, the present population under 10 is 124,300; births were 117,900, and deaths of children under 10 years 48,600 during the decade; so that the probable addition to the population by birth according to the returns would be 69,300. This would leave some 55,000 children under 10 to be accounted for by immigration, a proportion of the total increase which is incompatible with the figures of increase in other ages.

Comparison with Mortuary Returns.	Total.	Males.	Females.
Population in 1881	460,722	248,844	211,878

Population, 1891	542,358	288,325	254,033
Balance	59,482	28,266	31,216

The greatest increase has been of children between the ages of 5 and 14, for whom immigration except to join their parents or husbands is an impossibility. No other age period shows anything approaching the increase of the two periods shown in the margin. From this and from the fact that the proportion of persons born in the districts has increased from 74 to 80 per cent., it is inferable that one cause of the increase is due to natural production. In towns the increase is primarily due to the immigration previous to 1881.

1881	31,686	27,120	21,747	15,236

The total number of persons born outside the districts is returned at 108,000, or some 5,000 less than in 1881. Of these some 75,000 were born in Rajputana Over 50,000 born in Ajmere have been censused in the different Rajputana States. It is the practice among some castes to marry or give their daughters in marriage in the surrounding States, so that these figures do not denote any special influx or departure.

It is remarkable that in Ajmere the Khalsa rural population has increased to double the extent of Istimrari estates. This has, however, to be modified to the extent of 3 per cent. because Deoli Cantonment was included in Istimrari totals in 1881, but even then the difference is marked, namely 17 per cent. in Khalsa and 13 per cent. in Istimrari villages. Sáwar and Kekri show the smallest percentage of increase of Istimrari areas; Bhinai has increased 16 per cent, and Masuda nearly 20 per cent.

CHAPTER III.

RELIGION.

The religions enumerated were the same as in 1881, except that the Vedic belief has asserted itself sufficiently to claim separate classification. The followers of it numbered 1,121, namely, 645 men and 476 women, chiefly residents of Ajmere, where the head-quarters of the Arya Somaj are. Its members inclined to recording their mother-tongue as Aryan, and their birthplace as "Arya Varta," which though possibly correct is scarcely definite enough for Census purposes.

The figures for each religion with the variation since 1881 is given on the opposite page. Hindus make up 80·7 per cent. of the whole population, Mahomedans 13·7, and Jains 4·9. Native Christians number 1,209, having increased by 51 per cent., since 1881. Parsis number 196, Sikhs 199, and Jews 71.

The figures for the various sects of Christians will be found in Table A. Of the Mahomedan sects, Sunnis number 99 per cent. of the population. Wahabis were only returned in three instances.

The Aboriginal Bhils return themselves as Hindus, and they have no doubt become partially Hinduised.

Of the Mer population, 20 per cent. are Mahomedan and 80 per cent. Hindu. In 1881 Mahomedans numbered 23 per cent., but it would be unsafe to deduct from this that Hinduism has made greater strides amongst the Mers than Islamism, for some of the Mahomedan villages were affected by scarcity at the time of Census, and it is possible that there was a greater proportion of Mahomedan absentees than Hindu. The difference between Hindu and Mahomedan Mer is but ill-defined, and neither sect is deeply imbued with religious doctrine.

In neither Rural Ajmere or Merwara have the priestly classes increased in a greater ratio than the rest of the population, but in towns the increase is exceptional.

CHAPTER IV.

AGE AND SEX.

AGE.

The ages of the population will be found in Imperial Table VII, from which the proportional table on the opposite page has been compiled. The figures are fairly in accord with those of Bombay or the North-West Provinces. The chief differences appear to be that Ajmere has (a) an excessive proportion of children, especially females, and (b) an unduly low proportion in the period 20—29. This latter is traceable to the effects of the famine of 1868-70, when there was great mortality among children.

Though Ajmere rejoices in an excessive proportion of children, yet the proportion of population under 20 does not differ materially from that of Bombay or the North-West Provinces, and it is therefore inferable that the mortality of infants is higher here than in Bombay. This is borne out by the mortuary returns, according to which the death-rate of children under 10 is about 30 per mille, but in Bombay it is under 20 (1881).

Bombay	26·5	27·5	47·5	46 0
North-West Provinces	25·5	26 1	46·2	43·5

The table given in the margin would go to show that abnormal mortality occurs amongst children in their first year; the fall in the ratio of "under one year" and that of one year being so much more abrupt than in other Provinces. Some allowance may be made for inaccuracy in these two age-periods, as all children under one year were to be recorded in the schedules as "infants," and there may have been a tendency to apply this term to babies of over 12 months. The mortuary returns show that 18 per cent. of males and 19 per cent. of females die before attaining one year, but in this case also allowance must be made for inaccuracy in the registration of births. One deduction can safely be made from the above table, namely, that Ajmere has a very high average of births to population.

North-West Provinces	261	280	216	236	189	218	263	299	283	294

There is a higher proportion of males of the period 5—9 than in that of 1 to 4. This appears due partly to the fact that there were actually 4,366 less births registered from 1886 to 1891 than in the period 1881—1885, partly also to immigration.

Taking children generally, that is boys and girls under 10 years, the proportion is higher than in 1881; it is higher in rural than in urban areas; it is much higher in rural Merwara than in rural Ajmere, and this was also the case in 1881, and is possibly due to greater vitality in their early years of children born of fully matured parents, as the Mers and Merats are when they marry. Ajmere town with its large floating population returns the lowest proportion of children.

The proportion of children to population in the principal castes is given in the marginal table. Mahomedan Mers figure highest, because their women on marriage to Hindus mostly assume the Hindu religion, while Hindus marrying Mahomedan Mers often adhere to their Hindu faith in name. This has been clearly established by reference to the schedules themselves and accounts for much statistical discrepancy between the two sects of Mers at former Census. The proportion of boy children among Mahomedan Mers is 32·2, but that of females is 45·5. Of the other castes, the proportion of children gets smaller in an inverse ratio to the social position of the castes.

The table given in the margin shows that in each religion female children are proportionately more numerous than males, but that after nine years the reverse is the case, The proportion of Mahomedan female children is abnormally high, and the decrease in the proportion after four years, abrupt, arguing high mortality The proportions are however exaggerated, because Merat Mahomedan girls return themselves as Hindus on their marriage as is explained above. Taking the Jain figures as about normal, they being less affected by immigration than either of the others, then Hindus and Mahomedans are more prolific of children, the latter more especially of female children, but both Hindu and Mahomedan life suffers more after 14 years of age than Jain. Taking 20 to 40 as the prime of life, Jains show a proportion of 33 per cent. of males and 32 of females between those ages, Hindus 31 per cent. of males and females, and Mahomedans 31 per cent. of males and 30 per cent. of females. Hindus and Mahomedans have a higher proportion of the extreme old-aged than Jains.

The comparison given in the margin shows how greatly the average age has increased since 1881. In towns this is partly due to the immigration of adults, but in rural areas (more especially in Merwara) this is only the case to a very limited degree, and freedom from famine and sickness, and the general recovery of the population from the effects of the famine of 1868, must be taken into account.

To take stock of the ages of the population it is necessary to compare each age-period with the preceding period of 1881. This gives the result shown in the margin, namely, great increase from outside between the ages 20—29, especially of females. The whole of this increase was, however, in the urban population. The rural population shows a decrease in this age-period as compared with 10—19 of 1881.

Out of every 1,000 males enumerated 532 were males and 468 females, the highest proportion yet recorded in Ajmere. The proportion in Bombay and the North-West Provinces (taken from the preliminary totals) was 482 females and in the Punjab 461. The Ajmere figure is much reduced by the small proportion of women in town where there is a considerable male floating population. The proportion of women in rural Merwara in 1881 was 447, while at this Census it is 461, the higher proportion being probably due to better enumeration. Some of the male population was absent owing to scarcity at the time of the Census, but there was an actual increase in the number of women of 22 per cent., which is not otherwise accounted for.

In comparing the proportion of female to male population by religions, Mer tribes should be excluded from both Hindus and Musulmans. In the marginal table Jains are included for the sake of comparison with former years. Excluding the Mer tribes, the proportion of Mahomedan women to males, namely, 460, is less than in 1876, but there has been a great influx of Mahomedan males in search of labour, and at the time of the Census the Urs Fair was just about to begin and the male population was abnormally high in consequence.

As in other Provinces the proportion of females varies greatly with different castes, the lowest proportion being generally found amongst the castes of highest social rank. The only explanation that can be offered for this is that in castes in which marriage is easy and remarriage of widows the custom, and in which the woman earns a portion of the family income, she is hardier and better cared for in youth and age than among social orders not subject to these conditions. The proportion of women in the principal castes is shown in the marginal table. As regards Minas, the tribe is not numerically strong, and a number of males come from the surrounding native territory for work or service in the Mina Regiment at Deoli.

Some remarks are called for on the proportion of females to males at the different age-periods. The birth registers for the last 10 years show that male births exceed female by 20 per cent., while 18 per cent. of males and 19 per cent. of females die before attaining one year. Males should therefore exceed females in the first year by about 23 per cent., but the Census returns do not show this. Perhaps in a country where a common form of mild abuse is to call a man "a father of daughters," registraton of female births can hardly be expected to be as punctual as that of males. The discrepancy between the Census returns and Birth Register is much greater in the case of females than males as will be seen from the following figures :—

	Males	Females.
Population aged 0—4 from Census returns	38,730	38,194
Births registered during last 5 years	31,498	25,534
Difference	7,232	12,660

If the ratio of females to males as registered were correct, then 15 per cent. less males than females attain the age of 5, but the Census returns would show that the mortality of females was about 3 per cent. higher than males up to that age. From 5 to 10 male life gains about 9 per cent. on female, and between 10 and 14 (the period of early marriage) male life gains another 13 per cent. on female, after which period female life holds its own, and more female individuals attain extreme old age than men.

The average age of males is 24·78 and of females 23·73.

CHAPTER V.

CIVIL CONDITION.

Table VIII gives the civil condition of the population generally, and supplementary Table E gives similar information for each caste. Some of the many deductions that can be made from these tables are given below.

Out of every 1,000 males enumerated 484 are single, 466 married, and 50 widowed. The figures in 1881 were 500, 449, and 50 respectively, so that the proportion of married men has increased by 2 per cent. Some idea of how these proportions compare with other parts of India can be formed from the table given in the margin. Elsewhere married men preponderate, here the greater proportion are single. This seems to be due to the low proportion of married men amongst the Mer clans, which taken together number one-sixth of the total population. The proportion of married women does not differ materially from that of the other provinces given.

and the proportions of each condition in the margin. In towns the proportion of children is smaller than in villages, and the marriage ratio is consequently higher. The ratio has increased 1·4 per cent. since 1881. In rural Ajmere the proportion of married have increased, and in Merwara married men have decreased by ·6 and females by 3 per cent. This is possibly accounted for by the fact that the proportion of the population under 15 has increased by about 4 per cent. since 1881. The proportion of widows is almost identical with 1881, Merwara still returning the lowest ratio accounted for by the fact that re-marriage is customary among widows of the Mer caste.

A table is given on the following page showing the condition of the populations by religion. The figures for Parsis, Jews, and Sikhs are not given, these races being foreign to the districts and few in number. The highest ratio of married is among Hindus and the highest of widowed amongst Jains. Mahomedans number most spinsters compared to bachelors, namely, 626 per thousand. Hindus number 613 and Jains 545. Hindus include such a number of castes with varying marriage customs that a more accurate idea can be formed of their civil condition from a study of the caste return. The highest ratio of married is amongst the Jats, Gujars, Malis, Kumhars, Khatis, Bhils, and the leather-working castes of Chamar and Balai; all these castes marry early, the re-marriage of widows is allowable, and the obstacles to matrimony few. Saraogis, Mahesris, Rajputs, Oswals, and the Mer clans show the lowest ratio of married, and, except the Mers, the highest ratio of widowed. Wives exceed husbands in number amongst Chamars, Balais, and Raigars, many of whose men emigrate for work, and amongst the Bhils and Mers the more or less aboriginal tribes. The proportion of husbands and wives under the ages of 10 and 15 have slightly increased since 1881, but not in a ratio equal to the increased proportion of population under those ages. The average age of marriage in Ajmere is later than in the provinces mentioned in the foregoing table. For instance, in Bombay, where the proportion of young and middle-aged is very similar to Ajmere, 795 in every 1,000 bachelors are under 15 years of age, here only 743 are. In Bombay 173 out of every 1,000 wives are under 15, here only 123. This betokens a general average of later marriage here than in Bombay. In towns the proportion of wives under 15 is 93 per 1,000, in rural Ajmere 145, and in rural Merwara only 79.

Amongst Hindus 13 per cent. of the wives are under 15, amongst Mahomedans 9 per cent., among Jains 7 per cent., and Christians 2. Jats and Gujars marry as infants, Kumhars Khatis, Hindu Mahajans, and Kayasths marry generally between 10 and 14, and Rajputs and Jains after that. The Mer tribes seldom marry before 14 or 15. Their poverty offers an obstacle to matrimony, and they are under no religious obligations on the subject.

Polygamy is permissible amongst all castes, but is not common.

Of late years a movement has been set on foot to induce later marriage among the Mahajan caste, Kayasths, etc., as has been done among Rajputs.

CHAPTER VI.

INFIRMITIES.

The four infirmities about which particulars have been obtained at the Census are unsoundness of mind, congenital deafness, total blindness, and corrosive leprosy. There would appear to be some uncertainty about the statistics of these infirmities, for in 1881 the results of the enumeration showed an unaccountable increase on the figures for 1876, and the present record shows as remarkable a decrease on those of 1881. Possibly both enumerations were inaccurate in opposite extremes. At the recent Census enumerators acquired the impression that only those blind from birth or insane from birth should be entered, and though special instructions on this point were issued, omissions probably occurred. Compared with the figures of 1881 for other provinces the proportion of afflicted returned is below the average in about the same degree as it was above the average at the former Census. The actual figures are given below :—

The proportion of afflicted is greater in Merwara than in Ajmere, except in the case of female insanes and lepers, and in this respect also the present return differs from that of 1881. This is, however, in accordance with the Census of 1876. Except that the population are poorer and more ill-fed than in Ajmere, there is no apparent cause for Merwara returning a higher per centage of afflicted.

Judging from the proportion of afflicted at each period, the number of infants born infirm is decreasing, especially in the case of the deaf and dumb. With such a very minute number however as are returned it is unsafe to try and make general deductions.

A table showing the proportion of afflicted in some of the principal castes is given in the margin. Native Christians show by far the highest proportion of blind due to the charitable adoption of infants so afflicted, while Sadhus show a very high proportion of all four infirmities, the infirmity being probably the cause of their becoming Sadhus. Of the other castes, Khatiks show an apparently large proportion of lepers, but the actual number affected is only 3. If the figures are at all correct, Ajmere-Merwara would appear to be satisfactorily free from leprosy.

CHAPTER VII.

EDUCATION.

The educational column of the schedule comprised details of the learning, the literate and the illiterate, as also of the language known by the literate. The value of the record, as regards those who are learning, has been nullified by students, regardless of instructions, returning themselves as literate. The total number of males enumerated as learning was only 6,179, while from the annual returns of the Education Department we know that over 8,000 boys are being educated at the various Government schools and private institutions. On the other hand, over 2,000 boys under 15 have been returned as literate, who are in all probability still in the hands of the schoolmaster, and no doubt a fair proportion of the 7,618 "literates" between 15 and 24 are under instruction also.

The general average of those learning or educated in Ajmere-Merwara is high, which is natural when the figures include a large proportion of urban population and of the trading classes. The proportion of the illiterate in this and other Provinces is given in the margin.

Beawar, with its trading community, contains the smallest percentage of illiterate males, while rural Merwara, inhabited almost exclusively by agricultural and menial classes, returns the greatest proportion of illiterates, both male and female.

Compared with 1881 and 1876 education seems to be spreading slowly, but surely, and female education to have made an appreciable advance. The rapid increase in the number of the instructed between 1876 and 1881 was due to the sudden influx of educated persons which the opening of the railway gave rise to, and was not likely to be repeated during the last decade.

The table given in the margin, from which children under 5 have been omitted as being incapable of learning, shows that education has spread most amongst Christians, Jains, and Musalmans. Amongst "Others" are included Sikhs, Parsis, and Jews. The proportion of Mahomedan boys and girls under 15, who are seeking or have acquired some education, is much higher than that of Hindus, while Jains naturally far distance either. It will be observable, however, that the proportion of educated Jain women, though higher than Hindu or Mahomedan, is meagre in the extreme.

Of the languages known by the literate details have only been abstracted of those who know English. They amount to 2,521 males and 321 females, out of whom only 2,058 males and 52 females belong to non-English speaking races. The proportion of Natives who have been returned as knowing English is 0·71 per cent. of males and 0·02 of females. The following are the principal castes numbering English scholars among them :—

In supplementary Table C is shown the number of literate in each caste. A table showing the proportion of literate in some of the principal classes is given marginally. The leather-workers are the least educated of all, but the agricultural classes run them close. Of these latter the Gujars are the most ignorant, with 0·9 per cent. of literate males, the Mer tribes next with 1·5 per cent., and then the Jats with 1·9 per cent.

CHAPTER VIII.

LANGUAGES.

The languages returned at the Census are shown in Imperial Table X. The prevailing language of Ajmere-Merwara is Hindi, the Marwari dialect of it being spoken in Ajmere and the Merwara dialect in Merwara. Ajmeri, though returned by a large number of persons, is not a well-defined distinct dialect. The percentage of population returning the vernaculars of the Province or of other countries is shown in the marginal table. Hindustani has not been included as a vernacular of the Province, though it is so among Mahomedans. In Ajmere 76 per cent. of the population return the language of the District, namely Marwari and Ajmeri, and 12 per cent. other dialects of Rajputana.

The following dialects returned in the schedules have been included in the main dialects to which they belong :—Kishengarhi, Haryani, Sekhawati, Maharastri, Brij-bhasha, Alwari, Bharatpuri, Lashkari, Bundelkhandi, Nāgărchal, Pahari, Karnatăki, Nāgărwāli, Rewari, Jhallawari, Guwalior, Khāndes, Nagri, Narnoli, Khairarí, Rathi, Perdesi, Kachi, Peshawri, Allahabadi, Godwari, Mathura.

CHAPTER IX.

BIRTH-PLACE.

Birth-place has been abstracted from the schedules by districts and states if born in Rajputana, and by the province or country if born elsewhere. Classified according to the method adopted by the Census Commissioner the figures are as under :—

	Total.	Per cent.	Ajmere.	Per cent.	Merwara.	Per cent.
Born in district where enumerated .	433,664	80·0	3,31,009	78·3	93,170	77·6

Asiatic foreigners	109	·02	102	·02	7	·0
European and other foreigners . .	435	·08	422	·1	13	·01

The proportion of indigenous population is low. In 1881 few districts in other provinces showed less than 84 per cent. of indigenous population. The causes for this seem to be, 1st, the prevalent custom of extraneous marriage; 2ndly, the periodical migrations of the people owing to scarcity, and 3rdly, the large number of outsiders in the towns of Ajmere and Beawar. The figures for the male and female population are given in the margin, and show how large a proportion of the female element belong to contiguous states. Similarly, the number of females enumerated in other states of Rajputana who were born in Ajmere is nearly double that of males.

	Males.	Per cent.	Females.	Per cent.
Born in Ajmere-Merwara .	236,621	82·0	1,97,043	77·5

Born in other parts of Rajputana . . .	3,801	1·3	2,752	1·0

In 1881 the percentage of indigenous population was 74·5, namely 77·8 of males and 70·7 of females. Compare this with the figures now returned, and it shows that the proportion of those born in the districts has increased 4·2 in the case of males and 6·8 in the case of females. This is partially due to the time of Census not being the marriage season, as it was in 1881.

Ajmere and Merwara were included in Rajputana, and not abstracted separately in several provinces, but the following are the figures received of persons born in Ajmere :—

CHAPTER X.

CASTE AND RACE.

An exhaustive description of the castes composing the population of Ajmere-Merwara was given in the Census Report for 1881, and it only remains to bring the information up to date. Marriage and education in relation to caste have been added to the subjects for enquiry during the recent Census, as also the sub-divisions of each caste. These latter amount to over three thousand recorded sub-divisions, but in many cases they represent mere family distinctions, and in some are obviously incorrect.

In Imperial Table XVI castes have been grouped according to their hereditary occupation or by nationality; the six main classes and the proportion that each bears to the population was as under:—

A—Agricultural	40 per cent.
B—Professional	10 „
C—Commercial	9 „
D—Artisan and Menial	29 „
E—Vagrant and Minor Artisan	1 „
F—Races and Nationalities	11 „

The principal castes and their proportion to the whole population is shown in the table in the margin. After the Mahomedan race Jats, Gujars, Brahmans, and Mahajans are the predominating castes in Ajmere. In Merwara, Mers, Mahajans, and Balais make up 70 per cent. of the people.

The Rajput aristocracy number 3 per cent. of the population, the actual increase since 1881 being 9 per cent. The 12 principal clans given in the margin give their names to sub-divisions of almost every menial and artisan caste returned. By the Walter Krit Hitkarna Sabha Convention of 1886 the Rajputs of Rajputana are prohibited from marrying before the age of 16 as boys and 14 as girls. The 16 males and 46 females under 10 returned as married belong mostly to the imported Rajputs of the North-West Provinces and Oudh.

Jats excel all other castes in husbandry; they occupy villages in all the Ajmere Pergunnahs, but there are only 7 villages of them in Merwara. The number of sub-divisions recorded is 296; these "gots," or sub-castes, are very local, but at the same time well defined; intermarriage in the same sub-caste is not allowed, except in the case of widow re-marriage. Infant marriage is the custom.

Gujars exceed the Jats in numbers, and their sub-castes are nearly as numerous. They also marry as infants, constant feuds and quarrels being the result.

The Mer tribes number 23,525 in Ajmere and 61,348 in Merwara, having increased by 13 per cent. since 1881; but as 1,000 families are estimated to have emigrated previous to the Census owing to scarcity, they must have increased to a greater extent than this. The origin of these tribes and their descent from Mina ancestors was fully discussed in the report of 1881. For purposes of comparison all the tribes have been treated as one, for, though there are Mers and Rawats, Chitas and Merats, Hindus and Musalmans, they were all originally one, and at the present day differ so little in habit, religion, social custom, or occupation that they can but be treated as one tribe. In 1876 Mr. White described the separate nationality of the Mers as on the wane, and in 1881 Pundit Bhag Ram predicted the early Brahmanism or Islamism of the whole of Merwara. Efforts in this direction have, however, fallen very flat, and, notwithstanding meetings and agreements and the general acceptance of the theory of religious reform, the Mer retains a strong objection to putting Brahminical theories into practice. He draws the line at out-casting his erring brethren who may eat cow or swine, as the case may be. In Ajmere the Merats and Chitas show some signs of Islamism, but, generally speaking, Hindu and Musalman eat and drink, smoke and marry together with as little restriction as heretofore. Hindu Mers have increased since 1881 by 15 per cent., and Musalman Mers by only ·4 per cent., but this is owing to a larger number of Merat absentees, and not to any religious changes. The numbers returned of each clan was as under:—

		Ajmere.		Merwara.
		Males.	Females.	Males.	Females.
Mer	Hindu	9,258	8,891	5,477	6,841
	Musalman	...	...	14	18

	Musalman	...	...	32	43
Barar Rawat	Hindus	62	46	7,180	3,265

Rawat is a title of nobility, and is adopted by various clans or individuals of a clan, and the number shown in the above return includes Chitas, Merats, and Mers. The Barar Mers have always been called Rawats. Barars and Chitas were originally Chohan Minas, and Merats are really Chitas, descended from Mera, the common ancestor of the Gorat and Kātāt Merats. The other clans of separate stock appear to be the Powars, Mothis, Gehlots. The former include Delat, Kallat, Dodhing, Boya, Khiyat, Pokharya.

The Mer clans marry later in life than any other caste; widow re-marriage is customary; they have little education; they are all lovers of home, and are an indolent, good-humoured, impecunious race.

Malis number 14,414 in Ajmere and 1,959 in Merwara. They return 60 sub-castes, which are distinct from the main sub-divisions of Phularia, or flower-growers, and Kheter and Bhoi, or cultivators.

Minas number 4,593 in Ajmere, and are found chiefly in the Sāwār and Kekri pergunnas. In Merwara there are 19 men and 26 females. They return 27 sub-castes, of which the principal are Parihar and Motis. The tribe return a lower proportion of females to males than any other. Fifty-five per cent. of their males are unmarried, 34 per cent being adults.

Bhils have returned themselves as Hindus, and there is no doubt they are becoming Hinduised, worshiping Ramdeo and other gods in the place of the "Darti mata," or mother-earth.

Brahmans number 24,415 in Ajmere, but only 2,206 in Merwara, and there 1,530 of them are in the town of Beawar. The distribution in urban and rural population is as under :—

		Total.	Males.	Females.
Ajmere	Urban	6,870	3,865	3,005
	Rural	17,545	9,167	8,378
Merwara	Urban	1,530	914	616
	Rural	676	396	280

Rural Merwara supplies only 676 Brahmans against 787 in 1881, and most of these are cultivators. Brahmans as a whole have increased 22 per cent., 41 per cent. in Beawar, 43 per cent. in Ajmere town, and 13 per cent. in rural Ajmere They return 47 sub-castes, of which the numerical strength of the principal is as under :—

Shami is an incorrect caste appellation, but has been returned in 158 cases.

Kayasths have increased from 1,658 in 1881 to 2,916, the railway being the chief cause of this influx of the writer caste. Here, as elsewhere, this caste are striving for social promotion, and Ajmere is announced as the meeting-place of the next Kayasth conference.

Mahajans number 46,117, having increased by 13·7 per cent. since 1881, or less than the general average of increase. They are distributed as under :—

Of the four main divisions Saraogis are all Jains of the Digambri sects; they have increased since 1881 by 26 per cent.; they number a greater proportion of literate of both sexes among them than other Mahajans, and they are skilful traders.

Oswals are Jains of the Swetambri sect, only 22 having been returned as Hindus; they have increased only 6 per cent. since last Census.

Mahesris are all Hindus, and they also have increased by 6 per cent. only.

Agarwals number 962 Jains and 4,462 Hindus; they have increased by nearly 20 per cent., considerable numbers from the North-West Provinces and Oudh having come to Ajmere.

Some Dhunsars have returned themselves as Mahajans, and some as Brahmans; they are all engaged in trade or professional occupations, and do not officiate in any way as priests.

Khattris have returned themselves as Mahajans; they number only 726.

Sonars return 3,244, of whom 750 live in Merwara. There are two main divisions of the caste, Bahmaniya and Medh, and the 28 other sub-castes returned are included in these.

Kumhars number 16,732, and are divided into the Khetars, or cultivators, and the Materas, or potters.

Darogha or Chākur is numerically the strongest of the servant castes; they are descendants of illegitimate Rajputs, and distinguish themselves by the name of the Rajput clan they belonged to, though such distinctions have ramified into mere family names, such as Bakshiramot and Bhowanidasot.

The leather-working castes make up 14 per cent. of the population. Khatiks, Chamar, Balai, Raigar have increased in a marvellous ratio since the opening of the railway and the consequent demand for labour. These four castes have increased by no less than 22,600, or 44 per cent. since 1876, and by 20 per cent. since 1881.

The number of Sansis and Kanjars enumerated was 670, but there must be some 2,000 Sansis moving about the borders of the district. They are settled in only one village, namely Galti, where there are two or three families. Baories number 161, of whom 47 males and 46 females are more or less adults, that is to say, over 15 years of age.

Mahomedans generally, with the exception of Mers, have been all included in non-Indian Asiatic races. Deswalis, Mewatis, and Kaim Khanis are, however, purely Indian, though returning themselves as Mogal, Pathans, etc. The former, viz. Deswalis, number 4,010, divided between Sheikhs, Syads, Mogal, and Pathans, according to the fancy of the individual. There has been a large influx of Mahomedans to Ajmere in recent years; since 1881 they have increased by 35 per cent.

European British subjects number 729 against 872 in 1881, the decrease being due to the absence of the British regiment from Nasirabad, which was in course of relief. Foreigners number 109. The number of Europeans and Foreigners enumerated within Military limits was as under :—

	Total.	Males.	Females.
Nasirabad Cantonment	246	201	45
Ajmere Cantonment	4	4	...
Deoli Cantonment	13	9	4

The number of Foreigners was as under:—

Eurasians number 616 in Ajmere and 20 in Merwara. In 1881 only 196 Eurasians were returned.

Native Christians have increased from 799 to 1,209; there are 885 in Ajmere and 324 in Merwara.

CHAPTER XI.

OCCUPATION.

Table XVII shows the occupations of the people, and in the case of non-workers the occupation from which their living is derived. The table shows three age-periods, namely 0—4, 5—14, and 15 and over. For the purposes of this table persons of the latter period can be considered as adults, though no doubt in some occupations boys and girls are contributing to the work and earnings of the family before that age. The total number of adult males is 176,833 and of females 154,893. By excluding the whole population over 60, the following estimate of non-workers is arrived at. Religious mendicants have not been included in this list, as this term is applied to many who are more or less employed in priestly duties. Their labour, however, must be considered unproductive, and if they are included, the percentage of non-workers is 54·6 per cent. of the population; or, in other words, 45·4 per cent. are engaged in more or less productive pursuits, a low proportion compared with other provinces, accounted for by a high ratio of children and aged.

The smaller proportion of children in towns results in an increased ratio of male workers, namely 61·4 per cent., but in towns only 19·4 per cent. of the women do any work. In villages 53·4 per cent. of the men and 41·4 of women work for their living.

The classification of occupations adopted for abstraction with the figures for each class and for adults is shown below—

This table gives the percentages shown in the margin, from which it will be seen that nearly 50 per cent. of the population are dependent on agriculture for their livelihood; or if the figures for those combining agriculture with other pursuits be included, the proportion is nearly 53 per cent.

The system under which occupations were tabulated in 1881 does not admit of accurate comparison with the present returns, which show the number dependent on each occupation, and not the number actually employed in it. In the agricultural class the definition of occupant and tenant differed in 1881 from that now adopted. The proportion of agriculturists according to their connection with the land is shown in the margin. There was a tendency on the part of some tenants to return themselves as proprietors, but the number finally returned erroneously is probably very small. The agricultural population of each division of the districts is given below, excluding Herdsmen and Stock-breeders :—

The number returned as combining other occupations with agriculture is 17,845. The number of both sexes returned in 1881 who combined agriculture with their ordinary profession was 8,791. The number of the money-lending class owning or working land is returned as follows :—

	Total.	Males.	Females.
Money-lenders	1,301	638	663
Merchants	76	48	28
Shop-keepers	1,483	736	747
Total .	2,860	1,422	1,438

Of these 35 per cent. cultivate themselves and 65 per cent. are non-cultivating.

Of other occupations the Railway supports 10,649 persons in all, not counting coolies and unskilled labour. Adult male employés number 4,444. The number employed in 1881 was 2,016.

Cotton industries provide for 24,184, including 7,264 adult males and 8,213 females. New presses at Kekri, Beáwar and elsewhere have given considerable impetus to this industry.

Printers, gold and silver smiths, potters, merchants and leather workers all show an increase of adult males since 1881, while the number employed in education, literature, law or in musical professions have also increased.

The number of general labourers has risen from 19,054 to 33,682 adults, the greater proportion being women; and the number of ordinary beggars has decreased by 760 adults.

CHAPTER XII.

ADMINISTRATION.

Census operations practically began in August 1890, when indents for schedules were despatched, officers appointed to make preliminary arrangements and instructions issued to them.

The numbering of the houses began in villages on 10th September and later in towns. The preparation of the villages and ward lists showing the name of the occupant of every house, and of the preliminary register A showing the locality of the houses, etc., numbered, went on at the same time as the numbering. All numbering was completed by 15th October, by which date also most of the Charge Superintendents had submitted proposals for the division of their charges into circles and blocks. There being no record of the circles and blocks adopted in 1881, this work was done afresh. By 15th November circles and blocks were finally confirmed and supervisors, and most of the enumerators appointed, and their instruction went on up till the preliminary Census, which began on the 15th January.

The preliminary arrangements were carried out in Khalsa areas by Tehsildars and in Istimrari villages by the Istimrardar supervised by the Deputy Magistrate, Kekri, and the Revenue Extra Assistant Commissioner. In towns the preliminary arrangements were carried out by the Municipalities or Cantonment Committees.

The number of circles and blocks was as follows :—

	Circle.	Blocks.	Average houses per block.	Average population per block.

TOTAL	415	3,488	29·1	155·4

Besides the above, 267 special enumerators for roads, travellers, etc., were appointed, and the encampments of wandering tribes were enumerated thrcugh the Police. A fixed number of dwellings were appointed to each enumerator, and the village lands outside the village dwellings were apportioned territorially. On the night of the Census tickets were issued to all travellers, or persons about to travel, to prevent them being enumerated twice.

The following is a synopsis of the classes from which supervisors and enumerators were drawn:—

	Official.									Non-official.
	Railway.	Revenue and Judicial.	Police.	Education.	Military.	Patwari.	Medical.	Others.	Total.	Bankers and traders.	Landholders.	Petition-writers.	Servants of Istimrardars.	Religious.	Others.	Total.

Enumerators .	20	41	9	38	33	25	...	1	167	2,374	101	38	6	1	801	3,321

Census officers were appointed under the Act by the Commissioner. No prosecutions under the Act took place.

The non-official Census officers were mostly volunteers and did their work cheerfully and in most instances with intelligence.

The schedules were bound up in books of 50, 30 and 12 pages each, and spare schedules were sewn in to the covers by supervisors if needed; if two books were used for 1 block they were sewn together.

The number of books issued was as under—

	Hindi Books.	Urdu Books.	English Books.	Spare Schedules.	Household Schedules, English.
Ajmere	3,504	399	83	3,479	79
Merwara . . .	1,020	68	...	1,568	15
Total .	4,524	467	83	5,047	94

or in all 198,412 schedules, of which 5,628 were returned unused. The average number of entries per schedule issued was therefore 2·8 persons.

The morning after the Census enumerators and supervisors filled in the preliminary total abstracts and forwarded them to head-quarters. The totals of these abstracts were found very generally correct, but owing to the non-receipt of some railway abstracts, the preliminary total for the districts differed from the final total by 468 persons.

The total cost of the Census enumerators was as follows:—

	₹ a. p.	₹ a. p.

(Note.—Rupees 153-5-9 shown in accounts submitted to Comptroller were on account of schedules supplied to the Rajputana-Malwa Railway and are omitted from above cost of the Ajmere-Merwara Census.)

The Census of the Rajputana-Malwa Railway and the British Cantonments in Rajputana and Central India having been abstracted in the Ajmere office, a special staff was engaged, but superintendence, correspondence, etc., was done by the Ajmere staff, and a rateable deduction has therefore been made from the total cost of establishment under these heads calculated on the number abstracted.

A similar deduction has been made in the printing charges. This gives the following cost of abstraction:—

	₹ a. p.	₹ a. p.
Tabulation and Abstraction—
Office furniture	72 0 0

TOTAL SUPERINTENDENCE		838 0 0

NOTE.—The total expenditure in the Ajmere office was ₹9,134-4-7, of which ₹3,298-5-10 is debited to Railways and cantonments, ₹594-4-4 of this being expenditure on enumeration, ₹2,523-10-2 on abstraction and ₹180-7-4 on superintendence.

The cost of printing this report is not included in the above.

The total cost of the Census was therefore—

(a) Enumeration	1,476 15 1
(b) Abstraction and compilation	3,444 0 0
(c) Superintendence	838 0 0
TOTAL	5,758 15 1

The total cost per 1,000 persons enumerated was ₹10-9-10. In 1881 the cost was for enumeration ₹1,519-0-0 and abstraction 1,112-9-11, no specially paid establishment having been employed.

The average number of abstractors and tabulators employed on the Hindi work was as follows:—

	Room Inspectors.	Abstractors, etc.
April	5	100
May	5	82
June	5	45
July	5	62
August	5	20

In addition to the above one Assistant Superintendent, two Branch Superintendents two record-keepers, and one correspondence and account clerk were employed.

The brunt of the work fell on the educational establishment and patwaris, who were employed, first of all, as supervisors and subsequently as abstractors, inspectors and tabulators. Deputy Inspector of Schools, Munshi Thakur Dass, was Assistant Superintendent, and conducted the Hindi portion of the work to its conclusion, in a most creditable manner.

Suggestions for future guidance.—The Nagri and Urdu editions of the schedule, forms and registers, in use in the North-West Provinces will probably be found suitable for Ajmere-Merwara, and a special translation or a special set of forms is unnecessary. The schedules should be bound in books of two sizes only, namely of 60 pages and 30 pages—that is, if the practice of entering one house only on each page is adhered to. The issue of two books to one enumerator gives rise to confusion. Abstraction should be done by a paid staff instead of by Patwaris and School Pandits. The interference with the Revenue and Educational work which ensues from their being brought into Ajmere for 3 or 4 months is not compensated for by the small expense saved. In the long run it would be more economical to employ a special staff.
